About ICWA

The Indian Council of World Affairs (ICWA) was established in 1943 by a group of eminent intellectuals led by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Dr. H.N. Kunzru. Its principal objective was to create an Indian perspective on international relations and act as a repository of knowledge and thinking on foreign policy issues. An Act of Parliament in 2001 declared the ICWA to be an 'institution of national importance'. The ICWA is headquartered in Sapru House, an iconic heritage building in the heart of New Delhi that was inaugurated by the first Prime Minister of India, Shri Jawaharlal Nehru in May 1955. The council today conducts policy research through an in-house faculty as well as through external experts. It regularly organizes an array of intellectual activities including conferences, seminars, roundtable discussions, bilateral dialogues, international conferences, lectures and outreach activities in India and abroad and brings out a range of publications. The Council has a well-stocked library, an active website, and publishes the journal 'India Quarterly'. ICWA has over 50 MoUs with international think tanks and research institutions to promote better understanding in international issues and develop areas of mutual cooperation. The Council also has partnerships with leading research institutions, think tanks and universities in India.

Concept Note

In the evolving geopolitics, the strategic importance of Indian Ocean island states has gone up significantly. As the region is emerging as a key fulcrum of international politics in the 21st century, major, extra-regional powers are making active efforts to gain a foothold in the Indian Ocean. In this context, the role and position of smaller yet strategically important island states are critical. The competition between major powers for expanding their strategic influence and security presence has given these smaller states with bargaining power and they are able to leverage their strategically critical location, to maximize their gains.

The security presence in the form of military bases, listening posts, naval monitoring stations, joint military exercises, and/or logistics support facilities will enhance the ability of the naval forces to operate in the Indian Ocean. It will also help in monitoring the sea lanes, which are crucial for global energy and economic security, passing through the Indian Ocean. At the same time, the rise in non traditional security threats such as piracy, terrorism, IUU fishing is posing a challenge to the regional security and stability. In the back drop of global geopolitical shifts and great power rivalry, external powers are seeking to establish a foothold in the region. Increasing interest of Quad and AUKUS member-states in enhancing their foothold in the region is also seen as a counter to China's assertive presence in the region. The great power politics in the Indian Ocean is also generating new vulnerabilities for the island states. In this context of increasing presence of major powers and the sharpening strategic rivalries, India's engagement with the island states of the Indian Ocean is taking shape.

The reverberations of India's rise as an economic and military, especially naval, power is felt across the region. India perceives itself as a net security provider in the region and “preferred security partner” for the Indian Ocean states both in traditional and non traditional security realm. The island states have looked up to India for support as a first responder. India has sought to respond to calls for assistance, be it the water emergency in the Maldives or the relief efforts in the wake of a cyclone in Madagascar. Therefore, it would be interesting to understand and locate the Indian Ocean Island states in India’s foreign policy.

India has been vigorously engaging with the Indian Ocean Island states as part of its SAGAR (Security and Growth for All in the Region) initiative. India is engaging with Sri Lanka and Maldives as part of Neighbourhood First policy. In the last few months, it has extended considerable help to Sri Lanka to tide over the economic crisis. In the case of Maldives, the relationship has strengthened and defence and security cooperation has emerged as a key building block of the relationship. Seychelles and Mauritius are important partners in India’s outreach to the Western Indian Ocean region. India’s Africa policy and Indian Ocean strategy converge in the Western Indian Ocean. Regular, high-level visits to Seychelles and Mauritius have deepened the relationship. Recently, Navy Chief visited Seychelles whereas the Prime Minister of Mauritius was in India for an extended, eight-day long visit. These visits underscore the importance that India attaches to these states. Madagascar, Comoros and French Indian Ocean territories too feature prominently in India’s engagement with the Southwest Indian Ocean.

The proposed conference seeks to discuss these and other related issues that affect the security dynamics of India and these island states.
